If he had occasion to go out, on his return he undressel and went to be! again to continue his studies. In his later years he dictated his writings to secretaries. He rurely corrected any. thing. The sentence issued complete from his mouth. If he felt his faculty for composition leaving him, he forthwith quitted his bed, gave up writing and composing, and went about his out-Jour duties for days, weeks and months together. But as soon as he felt his inspiration fall upon him again, he went back to bed, and his secretary set to work.

Cujas, and other learned men, used to study when laid all his length on the carpet his face towards the floor, and there he reveled amid piles of books which accumulated about him. The learned Aymot never studied without the harpsichord beside him; and he only quitted the pen to play it. Bentkam, also, was extremely fond of the pianoforte, and had one of them in nearly every room in his house.

Richlieu amused himself in the intervals of his labor, with a squadron of cats, of whom he was very fond. He used to go to bed at eleven at night; and, after sleeping three hours, rise and write, dictate or work, till from six to eight o'clock in the morning, when his daily levee was held. This worthy student displayed an extravagance equaling that of Wolsey. His annual expenditure was about four millions of francs, or about $800,000. How different the fastidious temperance of Milion. He drank water, and lived on the humblest fare. In his youth he studied during the greatest part of the night; but in his more advanced years he went early to bed, by nine o'clock, rising to studies at four in the morning of summer and five in the winter.
